Special Lecture On

“Significance and Value of Environmental Law in Professional Practice”

Programme Report:

The inauguration of the co-club and special lecture on Significance and value of environmental law in professional practice was organized on 28th April 2017 at college auditorium. The club was inaugurated by the Prof Ramesh M.K, Professor of Law, National Law School of India University, Bangalore and it was presided over by Prof K B Vasudev, Principal, VVLC, Mysuru. Inaugurating the club he spoke about how does every eco systems connected and inter connected and distraction of that system will leads to destruction of environment and leads to so many problems. He also mentioned that environmental problems are not only the local problem; it’s a global problem too. More importantly he said about how do the people that to a student have the role to protect and preserve the environment. He wished for success of the Eco-Club and he suggested so many activities to be include in the club activities.

Delivering a lecture on “Significance and value of environmental law in professional practice” Prof. M.K Ramesh mentioned that there are many advocates who contribute a lot towards protection and presevation of environment. He mentioned the significance and the values of environmental law in practice citing the role played by public spirited lawyer M C Mehtha. He cited few cases dealt by M.C Mehta in protection and preservation of environment. He also mentioned that the scope of profession is getting wider than olden days. Legal advice and legal aid is a requirement for every industry, company or corporation. It is a part of their corporate social responsibility. Concluding his lecture he wished the students all the success in their profession. The president of this programme Prof K B Vasudeva spoke about how being the student of law we should involve with the activities of the club. He said through this club we can achieve environmental protection.

The programme concluded with vote of thanks proposed by Prashanth T M, Coordinato, Eco Club. The programme was witnessed by students and staff.
